I remember when Grandma and Grandpa Dietz were living in their retirement home. I would play Bingo with Grandma Dietz. She was very skilled at bingo and enjoyed teaching me how to play. She told me which tables were lucky too. I made her a scarf and she called it her 'lucky bingo scarf'. I'll always cherish the memory's I had of playing bingo with her.

One of my first memories of Becky (from one of the first times I came to Pittsburgh with her son Jim) was watching as Becky and Harry walked ahead of us holding hands as we were going into a movie theater. I was touched by how sweet and how wonderful it was that these two people, married long enough to have two grown sons, would still be holding hands in public. I loved the stories about them falling in love as kids and Harry sending letters while he was in the Marines (which Becky kept among her most prized possessions). I will miss the great way Becky would giggle at something sassy that Harry or Jim would say but take comfort in knowing that she and Harry are now holding hands again.

Always have fond memories of Uncle Harry/ Aunt Becky's house in Bethel Park where we would always get together for picnics with the Dietz family. Playing Jarts as a kid was always a highlight. You are now back together with Uncle Harry - God Bless you both.
